TRUST

Genuine trust is a powerful and rare thing. In a world where it is usually assumed that people will deal deceptively if they can see a benefit in it, the trustworthy person seems to be going the way of the dodo. I suspect most of us, after yet another disappointing interaction in which we were deceived, have exclaimed, “You just can’t trust anybody these days!”

For saints’ honesty is not just the best policy, it’s the only policy. (Ephesians 4:25, 28) Yet even knowing this, is there a saint among us who hasn’t been guilty of deception and falsehood since becoming a Christian? Even once is too often. We must work to be honest for the world is working very hard to convince us not to be.

It is a wonderful thing to interact with an honest person, to feel that one can trust what is being said or promised. Yet there is a challenge to it. Real trust requires that one “put themselves out there,” so to speak. There is a certain vulnerability in placing oneself in the hands of another person and believing they possess the integrity, ability, and willingness to do what they’ve said they will do. Sadly, many have become cynical and jaded because they’ve been deceived so often. Even the most committed Christian may stumble a bit upon reading, Love...believes all things. (1 Corinthians 13:7) The cynic won’t and the jaded can’t. The loving saint must, yet even they are reminded not to be naïve and foolish. (Matthew 10:16)

God is the only One who does not and cannot lie. (Hebrews 6:17-18; Titus 1:1-2) Even so, the promises He makes are of such magnitude that there is a challenge to trusting them. Indeed, there is meant to be. Consider God’s words to Moses in Exodus 3:12. “But I will be with you, and this shall be a sign for you, that I have sent you: when you have brought the people out of Egypt, you shall serve God on this mountain.” This extraordinary statement leaves a great deal to be desired depending upon one's perspective. Much needed to happen between Moses' commission and returning to the mountain. A burning bush was one thing, overthrowing Egypt and its gods was another. Frightened and apprehensive, Moses chose to believe God and went about his assigned task. As he witnessed God proving His faithfulness time after time, Moses' trust multiplied until he became a giant of faith worthy of imitation. Yet it all began with God challenging him to trust His promises.

God has promised us that this world is still in His hands, that He will grant us wisdom and strength to understand His will and overcome the adversary, that the sacrifice of His Son and our faithful obedience to Him has rescued us from slavery to sin and its accompanying guilt, that all of the trials and difficulties we go through in this life will seem as nothing when we finally experience the glory reserved for us, and that we can pray whenever we want and our petitions are carried directly to Him by His Son who lives to make intercession for us. These promises are worlds beyond the promises man makes and often fails to carry out. Why should we believe them? Because God made them, and He will not lie to us. As God proves His faithfulness time and again the challenge to trust is replaced with the settled confidence and peace of trust. What a wonderful blessing!
